

The Davistown Museum

Native American Artifacts: Special Collections

In addition to the numerous Native American artifacts collected by The Davistown Museum during the last three decades, the museum has also been able to purchase three intact collections of Native American artifacts. The first collection is the Cohasset Hoard of artifacts purchased in the early 1990s. Because the artifacts in this collection come from many different locations in New England as well as from other locations, the Cohasset Hoard is not listed specifically as a separate collection, but is included in our general inventory of Native American artifacts. Because the other two collections, the Coffin Stream Assemblage and the Wapanucket 8 Hoard were collected in a specific location, by a specific person or persons, they are listed separately as special collections.

Coffin Stream Assemblage

Antonio Possante and family maintained a market garden at the end of Coffin St. in West Newbury at the intersection of River Rd. across the Merrimac River from the Judy Kimble farm in the Rocks Village section of East Haverhill. All of the cache of tools to be installed in The Davistown Museum was collected by family members over a period of 75 years. All of the tools in the collection with two exceptions were found within a small area bordering the Coffin Stream. These stone tools were often turned up during cultivation of the family's market garden; newly discovered specimens were carefully collected and added to the existing collection on an annual basis. Only one knife and a mortar and pestle were located further up the shore of the Merrimac River. The collection eventually became the property of Maurice Burnham of Milton, NH, who has generously made them available for installation and display at the Museum. Maurice also has made available to the museum a large mortar found along the Salmon Falls River near Lebanon, Maine, by his father many decades ago. This mortar, probably used for grinding corn, has been incorporated into the Coffin Stream Assemblage display. The Davistown Museum has been the fortunate recipient of a grant from MBNA to install this assemblage in a small room adjacent to the main hall of the museum.
